

whitney benns

Whitney is a consultant with Triad Consulting Group, where she works with corporate, nonprofit, and government clients to build communication and leadership capacity in negotiation, feedback, and conflict management. Whitney has worked with a range of clients including Ford Foundation, ArchCity Defenders, Capital One, Ropes & Gray, Converse, United States Office of Personnel Management, League of Conservation Voters, New York City Department of Education, Velir, Genzyme, and Upstream USA.

Whitney teaches negotiation at the Harvard Graduate School of Education where she is a lecturer. She was also an adjunct professor of law at Georgetown University Law Center. She has addressed and coached students and alumni at Harvard University, Tuck School of Business, Tufts Gordon Institute on Leadership, MIT Sloan School of Management, Harvard Kennedy School of Government and Harvard Law School. She has also facilitated executive education programs for the Harvard Negotiation Institute.

Whitney has written articles for the Atlantic Magazine and The Guardian, and was a contributor to OnLabor.org, a Harvard-affiliated blog that explores issues involving workers, unions, and politics. Her work is included in Readings for Diversity and Social Justice, 4e (edited by Maurianne Adams, et al. 2018). She is also a fellow with the Systemic Justice Project at Harvard Law School, where she works to create spaces for community building and collective action for legal practitioners, educators, and students working for systemic justice.

Whitney is from Salt Lake City, Utah, and stayed in the Rockies for college. She has a B.S. in Political Science and International Relations from the University of Utah, and a J.D. from Harvard Law School. Between college and law school, Whitney worked as an intern at Comedy Central's satirical news show, The Colbert Report.

Whitney can be reached at benns@diffcon.com.