Kathy is a consultant at Triad Consulting Group and teaches negotiation at Columbia Law School and Harvard Law School. Her clients include lawyers, financial regulators, corporate executives, nurses, jewelers, crisis communications specialists, and others who want to improve their negotiation skills. She also coaches individual clients on high-stakes negotiations involving both business and family issues. She has provided editorial consulting on two major books in the field.

Before entering the legal profession, Kathy was a widely published journalist. In 1990, she shared in a Pulitzer Prize in General News Reporting at the San Jose Mercury News. Her work has been published in many other publications, including The New York Times and TIME.

Kathy received her undergraduate degree from Harvard University and her law degree from Yale Law School. She clerked for the then-Hon. Sonia Sotomayor on the U.S. District Court in the Southern District of New York. She practiced law for two years at a New York law firm before moving into teaching and consulting.
